This is the formula that has created a furore in the medical profession, and has been the cause of the effectiveness in the treatment of stomach troubles. It acts differently from any other medicine, and it is a wide-spread almost, almost immediate relief to all the troubles of the stomach, belching, distension and headache. It is used for sufficient time and will bring the case of dyspepsia.

Two ounces essence of Peppermint
Two ounces essence of Sassafras
One ounce Catnip compound. Mix and take one to two teaspoonfuls after each meal, and before bed time. Almost always comes put up in ounce sized bottles, and is sold in every drug store. If it is stock by this time or he will quickly get it.

For best results mix the Peppermint and the Ginger, then let stand for a few days. The Peppermint is tender. It will be more convenient to use the Peppermint and the Sassafras and mix them at home. Any one with stomach trouble should get this remedy. If it is not in stock, get the Peppermint and the Sassafras and mix them at home. Any one with stomach trouble should get this remedy. If it is not in stock, get the Peppermint and the Sassafras and mix them at home.

Get out some Catnip prescription and add it to some suffering friend.

The bridesmaid is to be Miss Margaret Clements of Charles City, Iowa, and the best man Wayne Dodge of Detroit.

Women—What Would Be Your Three Wishes?

And Men, What Would Be YOUR Three Wishes? Answers
Requested

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal Company

We are all on this earth struggling, striving, wriggling, eager, dissatisfied, unhappy.

What is it that we really want? For what are we struggling? And why do we stay here, and swallow and digest the "slings and arrows," when we might all of us go to sleep and, so far as we know, stay asleep for ever?

"Definitions no terms," said Voltaire.

By that he meant, let's get an exact definition of the words that we employ.

Exact definition is essential to intelligent discussion and intelligent effort.

Wouldn't it be interesting for us all to say, "Definitions nos vœux," which means, let us define our wishes?

What do we really want? What does a man want who begins life full of ambition, and dwindles down into a money-making, bald machine?

What does a woman want who dreams of happiness in her girlhood and settles down to gossip, dress and frivolity?

In the fairy story, very often, the hero is told by the good fairy that he can have three wishes. And usually the three wishes are very foolish.

When the fairy offered three wishes to the old German peasant and his wife, the peasant thoughtlessly wished for a very big sausage; the wife angrily wishes that the sausage, which had instantly appeared, might be fastened to the end of her foolish husband's nose; then they had to use the third wish to remove the sausage from the nose; and the end of their wishing left them just where they were before.

We shall ask some of our distinguished contributors to answer the question, "What are the three things that a woman wishes for?" or, "What are the three things that a man wishes for?"

Our readers also are invited to answer the question, each according to his or her kind.

You may, if you choose, write what you actually would wish for, and also what you think that a man or a woman OUGHT to wish.

We shall print many of our readers' wishes, and supplement them with articles by our distinguished colleagues giving their views.

It may be said that wishing is a waste of time—but it isn't. Wishing is an expression of the mind and soul. The wish of the child shapes the grown human being. And about the most dismal of living creatures is the man or the woman who doesn't wish, who doesn't build castles in the air, and plan even for things that never can be.

What would you wish for yourself? Beauty? Power? Money? Love? Glory? And how much would you wish of each? Please answer.

Reciprocity in Trade With Other
Nations a Wise American Policy

The principle of Reciprocity, far from showing discouragement over the Canadian election, has received therefrom a new birth into larger life and usefulness.

Mr. Hearst's interview with the London Mail, reprinted in the Sunday AMERICAN, has struck a responsive note among American statesmen which promises to make it an epochal policy of our government.

"The American tariff should be reduced. If we do not succeed in making a breach in the tariff wall in one place we must try another. The United States should extend the principle of Reciprocity to grown-up nations of mature mind and man's size—to those nations which may be willing to enter into trade agreements with us without the fear that we shall absorb them."

This, in a nutshell, the substance of Mr. Hearst's interview with the London Mail.

Public men at Washington, of both parties, have given a hearty reception and cordial endorsement to the view. From statements already published it is more than likely that this will be the policy of the Democratic party in the House and Senate, and the State Department, if it is true to the logic of its own position, must give it full concurrence and co-operation.

The tariff wall must not be a Chinese wall of prejudice and exclusion. The tariff is a thing to be used for commercial protection and for commercial trading to our own advantage.

American products which actually require protection must be guarded by the government through reasonable duties upon foreign competition.

But wherever this country of ours needs the production of some other country to reduce the necessities and commodities of living, and wherever some great surplus product of our soil or industry is in demand in some foreign country, there is the opportunity for an intelligent and wholesome mutual agreement.

Simple common sense and mutual interest would dictate that the tariff walls of each country should be leveled to admit what the one country most needed or what the other country could find it easiest to spare.

Argentina, with her vast stores of meat, might help to lower our American cost of living, and we might send back in agricultural implements and machinery more than enough to pay the price of her foodstuffs.

France, with her oils and wines, might give us a good trade for our surplus foodstuffs, and even little Newfoundland, as yet of independent government, and of wiser mind than Canada, is anxious even now to make with us the agreement which Canada so foolishly rejected.

Reciprocity in trade with other nations is the best statesmanship which the commercial age of the times has devised.

The AMERICAN will fight in its usual way for the establishment of this as an AMERICAN policy.

The Chamber of Commerce Is Found on the People's Side of Every Public Question

At a hearing before the Harbor and Land Commission the other day, Mr. Woodward Emery, who was interested in a project which would forestall the plans and authority of the new dock commission created at the opposition to the project which came from the representatives of all the business organizations in the city, including the Chamber of Commerce, the Real Estate Exchange and the Public Improvement Association.

Mr. Emery's sarcasm was particularly directed against the Chamber of Commerce, and he charged that body with being under the control of the railroads and with indulging in perennial conversation about the commercial development of Boston, but always opposing every concrete project of development.

President Smith of the Chamber of Commerce resented this attack upon his organization and informed Mr. Emery that the Chamber of Commerce had withstood the schemes of railroad monopoly without faltering during the last two years.

The AMERICAN is able to tell the public that Mr. Smith is right. Mr. Emery has been hibernating for several years, and he spoke of the Chamber of Commerce as it used to be. The day is not long gone when the Chamber of Commerce stood in the same relation to any corporation demand that the Railroad Commission, with Messrs. White and Bishop constituting its majority, now stands towards any vital demand of the powerful public service corporations of this Commonwealth.

Like the present Railroad Commission, the old Chamber of Commerce served to give these corporation demands the appearance of business approval. But all this has been changed, just as it will be changed on the Railroad Commission when Governor Foss fills Mr. White's place, and Chairman Macleod and Mr. White's successor constitute the majority.

Today the Chamber of Commerce is throwing the great power and influence of its four thousand business men upon the people's side of every public question. It is probable that few men outside the Chamber appreciate the extent of its activities.

When a community is served by an organization of four thousand business men who are willing to contribute to the purposes of the organization $25 of their hard cash every year, the resulting public benefit will not be long in showing itself. Already its example has been followed by revivals of usefulness in other business organizations, and the effect upon the community is growing more and more apparent.

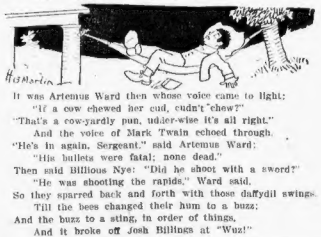

While it is controlled by and conducted in the interests of its great body of four thousand members, the Chamber will be a power for good in the community. But while it is guarding the public interests outside, it must be constantly on the watch for insidious contracting influences within its own organization. The corporations will surely make some effort to master it and to drag its activities. Already there is a rumor that these corporations are sending their young men into the Chamber to fight for positions of control.

So long as the members insist upon the referendum to themselves of all important questions, the danger of packing the Chamber is remote.

The Daffydil Craze

By MILES OVERHOLT

WHILE I lay in the hammock and snored soft and low,
That blended with hum of the bee,
A pleasurable feeling, an absence of woe
Came creeping and stealing over me.
Then a musical note in a faraway tone
Seemed to come from a presence near by,
Seemed to fall from the air like a feather is blown,
And I heard the faint voice of Bill Nye.
And he said: "Hello, Jack, where is Alma today?"
Josh Billings—for his voice came back—
Said: "Alma? Who's that?" in a querulous way.
And Bill then replied: "Alma-neck!"
Then the voice of Fred Hartman came in on the breeze.
"Say, I just peered some bark from the sky.
It was just a sky terrier," he said with a wheeze—
"As I frequently said to Bill Nye!"
